Barrow Hill has an intriguing history to which it owes its current status as a Local Nature Reserve, Site of Importance for Nature Conservation, notable for its richness of wildlife and habitats, and significant geological and architectural features. The walk guides you from the summit of Barrow Hill with its magnificent view through picturesque woodlands and grasslands past several ponds rich with amphibian life, and to added quarters with excellent exposed rock faces of high geological value. The walk also takes you past Cooper's Bank, which lies to the north of Barrow Hill and once housed Green Coppice and the Pensnett Conservation. Part of Tunley Green Coppice, along with the Banks of Pensnett strongholds is a Geological Conservation Review Site of national importance for its volcanic features.

Pre-historical and Historical Interest

Barrow Hill is a Local Nature Reserve and Site of Importance for Nature Conservation, notable for its richness of wildlife and habitats, and significant geological and architectural features. The walk guides you from the summit of Barrow Hill with its magnificent view through picturesque woodlands and grasslands past several ponds rich with amphibian life, and to added quarters with excellent exposed rock faces of high geological value. The walk also takes you past Cooper’s Bank, which lies to the north of Barrow Hill and once housed Green Coppice and the Pensnett Conservation. Part of Tunley Green Coppice, along with the Banks of Pensnett strongholds is a Geological Conservation Review Site of national importance for its volcanic features.

Pre-historical and Historical Interest

Barrow Hill has an intriguing history to which it owes its current status as a Local Nature Reserve, Site of Importance for Nature Conservation, notable for its richness of wildlife and habitats, and significant geological and architectural features. The walk guides you from the summit of Barrow Hill with its magnificent view through picturesque woodlands and grasslands past several ponds rich with amphibian life, and to added quarters with excellent exposed rock faces of high geological value. The walk also takes you past Cooper’s Bank, which lies to the north of Barrow Hill and once housed Green Coppice and the Pensnett Conservation. Part of Tunley Green Coppice, along with the Banks of Pensnett strongholds is a Geological Conservation Review Site of national importance for its volcanic features.

Pre-historical and Historical Interest

Barrow Hill has an intriguing history to which it owes its current status as a Local Nature Reserve, Site of Importance for Nature Conservation, notable for its richness of wildlife and habitats, and significant geological and architectural features. The walk guides you from the summit of Barrow Hill with its magnificent view through picturesque woodlands and grasslands past several ponds rich with amphibian life, and to added quarters with excellent exposed rock faces of high geological value. The walk also takes you past Cooper’s Bank, which lies to the north of Barrow Hill and once housed Green Coppice and the Pensnett Conservation. Part of Tunley Green Coppice, along with the Banks of Pensnett strongholds is a Geological Conservation Review Site of national importance for its volcanic features.

Pre-historical and Historical Interest

Barrow Hill has an intriguing history to which it owes its current status as a Local Nature Reserve, Site of Importance for Nature Conservation, notable for its richness of wildlife and habitats, and significant geological and architectural features. The walk guides you from the summit of Barrow Hill with its magnificent view through picturesque woodlands and grasslands past several ponds rich with amphibian life, and to added quarters with excellent exposed rock faces of high geological value. The walk also takes you past Cooper’s Bank, which lies to the north of Barrow Hill and once housed Green Coppice and the Pensnett Conservation. Part of Tunley Green Coppice, along with the Banks of Pensnett strongholds is a Geological Conservation Review Site of national importance for its volcanic features.

Pre-historical and Historical Interest

Barrow Hill has an intriguing history to which it owes its current status as a Local Nature Reserve, Site of Importance for Nature Conservation, notable for its richness of wildlife and habitats, and significant geological and architectural features. The walk guides you from the summit of Barrow Hill with its magnificent view through picturesque woodlands and grasslands past several ponds rich with amphibian life, and to added quarters with excellent exposed rock faces of high geological value. The walk also takes you past Cooper’s Bank, which lies to the north of Barrow Hill and once housed Green Coppice and the Pensnett Conservation. Part of Tunley Green Coppice, along with the Banks of Pensnett strongholds is a Geological Conservation Review Site of national importance for its volcanic features.

Pre-historical and Historical Interest

Barrow Hill has an intriguing history to which it owes its current status as a Local Nature Reserve, Site of Importance for Nature Conservation, notable for its richness of wildlife and habitats, and significant geological and architectural features. The walk guides you from the summit of Barrow Hill with its magnificent view through picturesque woodlands and grasslands past several ponds rich with amphibian life, and to added quarters with excellent exposed rock faces of high geological value. The walk also takes you past Cooper’s Bank, which lies to the north of Barrow Hill and once housed Green Coppice and the Pensnett Conservation. Part of Tunley Green Coppice, along with the Banks of Pensnett strongholds is a Geological Conservation Review Site of national importance for its volcanic features.

Pre-historical and Historical Interest

Barrow Hill has an intriguing history to which it owes its current status as a Local Nature Reserve, Site of Importance for Nature Conservation, notable for its richness of wildlife and habitats, and significant geological and architectural features. The walk guides you from the summit of Barrow Hill with its magnificent view through picturesque woodlands and grasslands past several ponds rich with amphibian life, and to added quarters with excellent exposed rock faces of high geological value. The walk also takes you past Cooper’s Bank, which lies to the north of Barrow Hill and once housed Green Coppice and the Pensnett Conservation. Part of Tunley Green Coppice, along with the Banks of Pensnett strongholds is a Geological Conservation Review Site of national importance for its volcanic features.

Pre-historical and Historical Interest

Barrow Hill has an intriguing history to which it owes its current status as a Local Nature Reserve, Site of Importance for Nature Conservation, notable for its richness of wildlife and habitats, and significant geological and architectural features. The walk guides you from the summit of Barrow Hill with its magnificent view through picturesque woodlands and grasslands past several ponds rich with amphibian life, and to added quarters with excellent exposed rock faces of high geological value. The walk also takes you past Cooper’s Bank, which lies to the north of Barrow Hill and once housed Green Coppice and the Pensnett Conservation. Part of Tunley Green Coppice, along with the Banks of Pensnett strongholds is a Geological Conservation Review Site of national importance for its volcanic features.

Pre-historical and Historical Interest

Barrow Hill has an intriguing history to which it owes its current status as a Local Nature Reserve, Site of Importance for Nature Conservation, notable for its richness of wildlife and habitats, and significant geological and architectural features. The walk guides you from the summit of Barrow Hill with its magnificent view through picturesque woodlands and grasslands past several ponds rich with amphibian life, and to added quarters with excellent exposed rock faces of high geological value. The walk also takes you past Cooper’s Bank, which lies to the north of Barrow Hill and once housed Green Coppice and the Pensnett Conservation. Part of Tunley Green Coppice, along with the Banks of Pensnett strongholds is a Geological Conservation Review Site of national importance for its volcanic features.

Pre-historical and Historical Interest

Barrow Hill has an intriguing history to which it owes its current status as a Local Nature Reserve, Site of Importance for Nature Conservation, notable for its richness of wildlife and habitats, and significant geological and architectural features. The walk guides you from the summit of Barrow Hill with its magnificent view through picturesque woodlands and grasslands past several ponds rich with amphibian life, and to added quarters with excellent exposed rock faces of high geological value. The walk also takes you past Cooper’s Bank, which lies to the north of Barrow Hill and once housed Green Coppice and the Pensnett Conservation. Part of Tunley Green Coppice, along with the Banks of Pensnett strongholds is a Geological Conservation Review Site of national importance for its volcanic features.

Pre-historical and Historical Interest

Barrow Hill has an intriguing history to which it owes its current status as a Local Nature Reserve, Site of Importance for Nature Conservation, notable for its richness of wildlife and habitats, and significant geological and architectural features. The walk guides you from the summit of Barrow Hill with its magnificent view through picturesque woodlands and grasslands past several ponds rich with amphibian life, and to added quarters with excellent exposed rock faces of high geological value. The walk also takes you past Cooper’s Bank, which lies to the north of Barrow Hill and once housed Green Coppice and the Pensnett Conservation. Part of Tunley Green Coppice, along with the Banks of Pensnett strongholds is a Geological Conservation Review Site of national importance for its volcanic features.
3. Disused Quarry

This area of ancient woodland with mature Oak, Scots Pine and Ash, covered an area extending to the east of Dudley, north of Kingswinford and south of West Bromwich. The ground was largely level and on ancient woodland for the last 22,000 years. This flat land was used for stock-rearing and had no water bodies, which was ideal for stock-rearing and had no water bodies, which was ideal for hunting.